A family of zinc finger proteins, one of which is encoded by the human Hedgehog-deficient gene (HHHD), plays a crucial role in specifying several developmental processes in Drosophila melanogaster. Analysis of the corresponding human gene, Hedgehog-interacting protein (HHIP), has suggested that it, too, is a zinc finger protein that is possibly involved in development. We have cloned HHIP cDNA and identified its expression in normal and cancer tissues. Mutations in HHIP cause the autosomal recessive disorder campomelic dysplasia. Expression of wild-type HHIP rescues the nuclear localization and cytoplasmic sequestration of Sonic Hedgehog (SHH) in cultured vertebrate cells, suggesting that HHIP functions as a SHH antagonist. HHIP is expressed in the early blastocyst and undifferentiated mesodermal tissues of the zebrafish, and is expressed in follicular atresia during ovarian development. We have characterized the expression pattern of zebrafish HHIP (zhHHIP). Our data suggest that zhHHIP is a general antagonist of Sonic and Indian hedgehog signaling, and that it plays a crucial role in the formation of the follicular niche, the early stages of follicle growth, and oocyte maturation. To examine the role of zhHHIP in maintaining a health animal, we have generated zhHHIP homozygous mutant mice by targeted disruption of the zhHHIP gene. Female homozygous mutants are infertile and have severe hypoplasia in the ovary. f678ea9f9e
